Dietary Advice Following Colonic Stent

Changing your diet can help to reduce the risk of stent blockages. The side effects of a blocked stent may include abdominal pain, nausea and vomiting. The following recommendations aim to help to soften stools, reduce their size and reduce the chance of pieces of food entering your bowel unchanged. Foods that can enter your bowel unchanged are those that contain fibre e.g. skins of fruit or vegetables and also tough pieces of meat or gristle.

What is Fibre?

Fibre is the part of plant foods including fruits, vegetables and grains that is not digested and passes through your gut intact. There are two main types of fibre and most foods are a mixture of both. For example the skins, seed and stalks of apple are high in insoluble fibre, while the flesh of apple is more soluble fibre.

Soluble Fibre: Eat more

Forms a gel within your gut. This helps you to have regular bowel movements and makes your stools softer and easier to pass. Good sources of soluble fibre include oats and the flesh of some fruits and vegetables.

Insoluble fibre: Eat less

Insoluble fibre adds bulk to your stools which may make it more difficult for them to pass through your stent. Insoluble fibre is found in wholegrains, pulses, nuts and the skins, seeds and stalks of fruit and vegetables.

Tips

- Aim to eat more soluble fibre and less insoluble fibre
- Chew all your food thoroughly
- Avoid foods that are tough or stringy e.g. gristly meat
- Peel all fruit and vegetables
- Cooked fruit and vegetables are easier to digest
- Some foods may be blended e.g. beans. When blended the skins add to your insoluble fibre intake but without the risk of the skins building up in your stent
- Drink plenty of fluids to prevent constipation. Aim for 1.5 - 2 litres each day. All fluids (except alcohol) count towards your daily intake e.g. water, tea, coffee, milk, squash, juice, soups
- If you are vegetarian or already follow a restricted diet you may find these recommendations more difficult to follow, please ask to see a dietitian for further information.
